* Low Speed Pre-Ignition (LSPI) - most commonly occurs in smaller displacement engines developed to meet higher fuel economy standards. It is random premature ignition which often occurs under low-speed, high-torque conditions in turbocharged gasoline direct-injected (TGDI) engines and can be more destructive than typical engine knock.

OEMs are shifting to lighter viscosity grades for fuel economy. The trend will continue to 0W-16 in the future.
